Three Links to Orthopedic Impairment Information

I found three great links to information on students with visual impairment and blindness. The first link that I have chosen is American Academy of Special Education Professionals. This site offers information on ten specific orthopedic disabilities, including spina bifida, cerebral palsy and spinal cord injuries. The next site that I'd like to share is Orthopedic Impairments. This website is kid-friendly, and offers information to parents, teachers and students on the different types of orthopedic impairments, along with a list of famous people with orthopedic disabilities. The third site that I'd like to share is OrthoKids. This website was developed specifically for children, and shares links, resources and information on orthopedic impairment, safety and prevention, and even has space for children to ask questions of a different orthopedic specialist each month. The site also provides links to educators for certification in
