Three Links to Hearing Impairment and Deafness Information

I found three links to more information on hearing impairment and deafness that I'd like to share on my page. The first link is for the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association. The ASHA is organization provides information and resources for speech, language, hearing, balance, and swallowing disorders. The website is also a place that families can visit to get information about health insurance and advocacy. The Alexander Graham Bell Association is a good place to find educational resources about hearing impairments. The association also hosts the Listening and Spoken Language Knowledge Center, which gives families of hearing impaired children support and information. The third link that I have chosen to share is the website for the Center for Hearing and Communication. This organization provides information and services relating to assistive technology and therapies. The CHC offers links and information on hearing aids, assistive devices, listening studio therapy and cochlear implants.
